WHEREAS, the ECGA does not own any of the Greenway trail system, but plays a vital role in ensuring its continuity and in monitoring trail conditions to ensure consistency in trail quality, and supports local trail agencies in securing the funds to maintain their trails; and

WHEREAS, the 24th annual general membership meeting of the ECGA will take place in Miami-Dade County November 13-15, 2015 for the purpose of advancing the Greenway- a 2,900-mile paved, off-road multi-use trail for transportation and recreation between Maine and Florida; and

WHEREAS, the ECGA seeks in each county where it convenes to help decision-makers integrate trails in the most asset-based way for lasting good purpose; and

WHEREAS, Miami-Dade County and its tri-county region, including Broward and Palm Beach counties, constitutes the leading economic region of Florida, yet it is a region whose economy and quality of life are endangered by massive roadway congestion; and

WHEREAS, many speakers at the Miami-Dade Transportation Summit in January, 2015 called on Miami-Dade County's support for initiatives in human-powered transportation that also add quality to life, especially initiatives for young adults who desire diverse mobility options, who are re-populating and helping revitalize the urban cores, and who find walking, biking and transit to be convenient, affordable, and compatible with their ethical outlook; and

WHEREAS, specifically, speakers at the Miami-Dade Transportation Summit in January, 2015 expressed support for a larger planning vision incorporating and linking projects such as the Underline, 'Plan Z' for the Rickenbacker Causeway, and the conversion of the former rail corridor into the Ludlam Trail; and

WHEREAS, Miami-Dade County already enjoys the largest network of trails of all 67 Florida counties and, together with Broward and Palm Beach counties, a transit network unequaled elsewhere in Florida, yet too few people are aware of these networks and the connections between them; and

WHEREAS, the public, private and nonprofit sectors have joined with the ECGA in an initiative called WHEELS that seeks to showcase the demand for the bike/walk/transit/trail connections, and which WHEELS initiative will involve a series of events involving an estimated 10,000 people between November 11, 2015 (Veterans Day) and November 15, 2015, drawing participants from both within and outside Miami-Dade County; and

WHEREAS, the Miami-Dade Department of Parks, Recreation and Open Spaces, through its Bike 305 program, is enlisting the entire Miami-Dade County bicycling community to lead by example during WHEELS, with the result that significant numbers of residents of the Tri-county area will find bike/walk/transit/trail a new and lasting mobility option; and
