WHEREAS, Representative Jose Oliva (R – Hialeah) has filed House Joint Resolution 169 (HJR 169) for consideration during the 2012 session that would offer significant property tax relief to low income senior citizens; and

WHEREAS, HJR 169 proposes a constitutional amendment to provide counties and cities a local option to grant an additional homestead exemption in the amount of the entire assessed value of property to an owner who:

1. Has maintained the property as a permanent residence for at least 20 years;
2. Is at least age 65; and
3. Has a household income not more than $15,000, with an income escalator for future years; and

WHEREAS, HJR 169 would provide low income senior citizens with additional property tax relief, many of whom are struggling during these difficult economic times; and

WHEREAS, HJR 169 would allow each county and city the local option to decide whether to provide such property tax relief to low income seniors based on the taxes each county and city levies; and

WHEREAS, senior citizens did not see the benefit of a cost of living increase in their Social Security payments for either 2010 or 2011; and

WHEREAS, senior citizens often have higher health care, insurance, and energy costs than their younger counterparts, and retire to lower or often fixed incomes, and have few opportunities to increase their incomes; and
