WHEREAS, within six months, crime and violence had dropped significantly, and by the eighth month, the NRT was reporting a crime-free area; and

WHEREAS, in 1994, then-Attorney General of the United States Janet Reno summoned Officer Tookes and his team to Washington, D.C. to give a presentation regarding the NRT and its efforts and success, which contributed to the creation of the Community Oriented Policing (COPS) program; and

WHEREAS, Officer Tookes was honored as the American Legion National Police Officer of the Year in 1999, after acting as a human shield over a fellow officer who had been shot; and

WHEREAS, during his tenure with MDPD, Officer Tookes has been awarded over 600 commendations for his professionalism and service to the community and the citizens he serves; and

WHEREAS, despite retiring in 2007, Officer Tookes returned to MDPD in 2011 to continue serving and sharing his community policing experiences with new hired police officers and other agency partners; and
